

Do your kids' stuffed animals multiply at night?

It's a common problem. Stuffed animals have been overpopulated in homes for years now but for some reason kids still LOVE them! They are under the bed, in toy boxes, on dressers, in the car and hidden anywhere else mom can find a place to stash them. And the irony in all of this? You probably gave your child a new stuffed animal for Valentine's Day!

Kids can only have so many stuffed animals but you are going to feel like you should put one in their Easter basket in April so what should you do? Recycle! I kept a tub of stuffed animals in the garage and rotated them once in awhile. I'd pull out the same stuffed animal and put it in my kids' Easter basket from one year to the next and they'd say "Wow, this is just like another bunny I used to have!" How's that for a money saving tip? If you don't think that will fly, trade stuffed animals with your neighbor and skip buying a new one for the Easter basket!

So what about the stuffed animals that are here to stay and have to be stored? In my opinion, Boon, Inc. came up with the most innovative and best solution to solve the stuffed animal crisis. They are bean bag chairs you stuff with stuffed animals. When the animals are not in use, it doubles as a chair! Gotta tell you moms and kids everywhere are loving this idea. Available in 3 sizes.
